Dorte Jagetic Andersen is senior researcher in the Centre for Border Region Studies, with a background in European Ethnology and European Continental Philosophy. Her main research interest concerns identity-formation in areas influenced by the presence of geopolitically drawn borders, and she has published extensively and made major theoretical and empirical contributions within the field of border studies. She has studied borderlands in the former Yugoslavia and more recently her contributions in the field of border studies and conflict-resolution include research on Northern Ireland and multiple expressions of borderlands resilience more broadly. She also works in projects studying how borders and identity express in European civil society mobilization as well as among cross-border commuters in the Danish-German border region. profile

ClimatePol: Klimatilpasning og klimapolitik på tværs af grænsen

Når det gælder klimaforandringer, så vil de blive hyppigere og kraftigere for hvert år. Byer og landområder på begge sider af grænsen har behov for at tilpasse sig både mere regn og stigende havniveauer ved vores kyster, men også at regnen eventuelt udebliver over længere perioder med et højt tørkeindeks til følge.

ClimatePols fokus er at gøre os klogere på eksisterende strukturer og skabe alliancer og samarbejde på tværs af grænsen, så vi får engageret både byer, regioner og alle andre aktører, der kan bidrage ind i klimatilpasningstiltag på alle niveauer og på tværs af grænsen.

Projektet er finansieret af Interreg Deutschland-Danmark og Den Europæiske Union og løber fra 2024-2027.

Coloring Borders Green

The project will make explicit why and how it is necessary to include more sophisticated understandings of borders, when implementing green transitions. Taking as its foundation the PI's border multiple approach to borders, the project provides a theoretical framework making it possible to assess both societal and spatial dimensions of borders and their effects on green transitions. The project's empirical core is an ethnographic study of stakeholder engagement in green transitions in the cross-border context of Sønderborg and Flensburg municipalities. The project thereby identifies and assesses the role and function of border-practices when key stakeholders work towards the implementation of green transitions, aiming to map the complexities of border practices in green transitions. The project will thereby provide a post-Westphalian mapping of borders adequate to achieve green transitions.

Extremists, Nationalists, Europeanists?: Europe's G20 War Heritage - hidden pasts, understanding conflicts, forging dialogues (RENE)

The Department of Border Region Studies (IFG) at SDU is internationally acknowledged in the field of border region research. IFG employs more than 20 senior researchers from 14 different countries conducting research on Europe's border regions. The research, which is documented in IFG's numerous publications, examines a diversity of topics including border conflicts and war heritage, which are the central themes in the RENEW project. IFG is internationally well-connected drawing on a field-tested research infrastructure. It hosts, on a regular basis, big international conferences such as the up-coming BRIT conference taking place November 2016, workshops, guest lecturers, etc. IFG also participates in and leads international projects, like the ESF project Signs of European Time.

Helping Hands. Research Network on the Borderwork of European Citizens.

As a consequence of people fleeing their home countries, especially Syria, and an increasing territorialisation of Islamic State, Europe is currently experiencing an almost unprecedented refugee crisis. Among European citizens reactions to the crisis differ; enhanced violence, discrimination, xenophobia and calls to close the European state borders are observed along with opposite movements, in which European citizens choose to support the refugees – upon arrival as well as in arriving. The interdisciplinary scope of the research network is to bring together researchers from Migration Studies, Border Studies and European Studies to explore the motives behind and rationales of these aiding initiatives, while focusing on North-West Europe. This will feed into future collaborative project proposals as well as research and educational activities that build on exchange of knowledge between Border, European and Migration Studies, an exchange which is currently not explored to its fullest.

SDU Climate Cluster Fast Track: Achieving a Truly Border-Crossing Green Transition

The necessity of intersectoral cooperation for a speedy and efficient green transition is generally recognized, yet the potential of intersectoral cross-border cooperation remains largely overlooked by academia and practitioners alike. The idea behind the proposed research is to tap into this potential to lay the foundations for long term cross-border cooperation in the Danish-German border region around the green transition.
