Teaching philosophy

At its core I believe that the goal of university teaching goes beyond teaching content, which means that the aim should be for the students to learn how to transfer knowledge, i.e. how to use theories etc. in other contexts and to critically reflect on them. In that I see myself as a facilitator. Therefore, active learning elements play an important role in my lectures, and I have a preference for supervision situations instead teacher-centred learning. During the COVID-19 crisis I revised the course teaching to a flipped-classroom model, which fits my philosophy and which I plan to at least partly include into my regular teaching endeavours also after the crisis.
