Basic Teaching Philosophy

I believe that the best learning occurs when both the teacher and the students are contributing. The teacher should introduce students to a new topic, not just by explaining it, but by also talking about the significance and why we should care, why this matters. This, in turn, hopefully sparks an interest in students, who will deepen their understanding by exploring the topic themselves, being actively involved in the learning process. Ideally, there is positive synergy between the teacher and the students.

Teaching methods & teaching material

My teaching is focused on going through practice problems and encouraging students to do exercises themselves at home. Student presentations are also a big part of my teaching. This encourages the students to proactively spend time with the material and trying to summarize and communicate the content to other students.

Teaching Experience

I have taught management accounting at The University of Texas at Austin twice, and now here at SDU twice as well. All courses were at the undergraduate level and in English.
