Pedagogical idea

My teaching aims at equipping students with not only profound theoretic, but also practice-oriented knowledge. It is thereby important to me to include my own as well as international research in the teaching content. Depending on the group size, I usually prefer interactive over teacher-centered teaching. In fact, I have made very good experiences with mixed formats, in which, for example, intensive theoretical teaching sessions are complemented by guest lectures by practitioners, or student work group presentations.

Pedagogical competence

In the past, I have gathered profound teaching and presentation experiences in German and English language. I have taught various courses with different teaching approaches, which I choose based on the requirements. I have applied teacher-centered approaches for groups of up to 600 students, and conducted student-centered interactive lessons with small groups of 15-20 students. In addition, I am regularly active within executive education, and I have held various presentations on conferences and workshops. The repeatedly excellent student/participant evaluations of my lectures/presentations are my motivation to keep up and exceed my own teaching/presentation standards. I have received the venia legendi (lecturing qualification) in business administration from the University of Duisburg-Essen in May 2019.

Pedagogical skills acquisition plan

I strive to constantly improve my pedagogical skills and reach the highest standards in teaching. I am frequently reconsidering my teaching approach in my lectures and test out new approaches regularly. For this purpose, I keep myself updated regarding new and innovative teaching approaches. Furthermore, it is very important to me to consider student feedback to improve my teaching. To broaden my own pedagogical horizon, I intend to regularly participate in lecturer training programs, e.g. offered by the university or other institutions.
