Teaching portfolio

Teaching philosophy

The portfolio illustrates a low formalisation of my teaching qualifications. It becomes clear from the list that, altogether and over the years, I have been responsible for only a few courses in a rigid university sense. However, I do appreciate to work with students and with pedagogical issues, and I have done so quite extensively. As a co-initiator of INNOTOUR.com I have found it particularly beneficial to include methods to align with external world in teaching ideas. It has been challenging to reflect strategically on the role of the university and how the tourism sector develops its knowledge base. I find that this is linked to a range of business economics subjects.

In order to be practical and take into account the present constraints on the Danish university system and the amount of time allocated for the position, I would be willing to take my fair share of the teaching obligations, for example courses and thesis supervision. A priority will be given to the development and successful implementation of the Tourism Innovation course with the Humanly Faculty. I regard this course a peak for my lengthy research endeavours in innovation issues. Developing and teaching this course will provide both opportunities to deliver a genuine research based teaching, but also working experientially with the students on topics that usually appeal to them. The development of appropriate teaching materials will be included in the process, as such are found only marginally.
