Teaching philosophy, methods, and profile

In my view, good teaching is about preparing students for their professional life as well as preparing them to serve their communities. I do not think there is a simple instruction sheet to deliver this kind of teaching, but I personally value:

- Problem orientation: to make sense of intrinsically important topical dilemmas and issues and help students identify concrete goals that they value;
- Rigor of inquiry: to bring social science concepts, theories, and methods to the political conversation;
- Interdisciplinary perspectives: to foster an understanding of social complexity and challenge clichés and simplifications.

I have taught and supervised on a broad range of topics related to EU institutions and policy-making, the comparative analysis of political systems, and global governance and the transformation of the state.
